CARES Act Report to the Community

Dear Friends,

When we each took on our leadership roles at the Vermont Arts Council and at Vermont Humanities, we envisioned future partnerships between the two organizations whose missions support Vermont's cultural sector, regardless of medium or discipline. In 2019 we co-hosted a Grafton Conference on the Power of the Arts and Humanities that brought together cultural leaders from across the state, from different generations, and from diverse perspectives and backgrounds.

In March 2020, when the Covid-19 pandemic hit Vermont, we developed a joint response to deliver urgently needed economic aid to struggling cultural organizations. We organized weekly Zoom strategy sessions for cultural leaders, connected with our political leaders in Congress and at the State House, and advocated for resources and support for museums, galleries, historical societies, performance venues, libraries, theater and dance companies, cultural centers, and more. And we continue this daily work in the ninth month of the pandemic.

This report shows what we did with the resources allocated for Vermont cultural institutions in the first CARES Act, passed by Congress in April 2020 and distributed through the National Endowment for the Humanities and the National Endowment for the Arts. For the first time, our two organizations co-created and implemented a joint grant program, distributing $781,000 in a matter of weeks to 123 cultural organizations across Vermont, in all 14 counties.

To stretch available funds, grants were awarded in increments of $5000, $7500, and $10000 based on the organization's budget size. We used an equity lens to ensure that those organizations that traditionally have higher barriers to resources were funded first. Well over half of the funding was distributed to the smallest and most at-risk cultural organizations, with annual budgets of less than $250,000.

While we appreciate this vital support through the CARES Act, the economic losses in the cultural sector are enormous. In the spring and summer months alone, Vermont cultural organization sustained over $35 million in lost revenue. As winter returns to the United States and community spread of the virus continues, the sector continues to lose millions of dollars each month. We are grateful for the support of the Vermont legislature and the Scott administration, which allocated an additional $5 million in July in recognition of this ongoing crisis. We urge you to contact your elected officials, thank them for what they have done already, and ask them to continue to advocate for the cultural sector, both in Vermont and across the nation. Our cultural organizations are essential for the vitality and recovery of our communities.

Sincerely,

Vermont Arts Exchange

“When Covid-19 came to town, we basically found ourselves with no audience for our music series, no participants in our art education work, and our studio became empty,” said Matthew Perry, co-founder and Executive Director of Vermont Arts Exchange in North Bennington. The $7500 Emergency Relief Grant VAE received from the Vermont Arts Council “feeds my morale big time,” said Perry. “Seeing the creative effort between the organizations collaborating and uniting is inspiring and hopeful.”

West Rutland Carving Studio and Sculpture Center

The Carving Studio and Sculpture Center inspires people to create three-dimensional art on the grounds of Vermont's historic West Rutland marble quarries. A $7500 Emergency Relief Grant from the Vermont Arts Council helped staff learn new safety practices, adapt to remote working, and find new ways of communicating with constituents. "It was the encouragement we desperately needed to move forward," said Executive Director Carol Driscoll.

Out in the Open

“We have seen a large increase in requests for support from our rural LGBTQ community members during the pandemic” said HB Lozito, Executive Director of Out in the Open. The organization, which aims to connect rural LGBTQ people, received a $5000 Emergency Relief Grant from Vermont Humanities. The funding helped Out in the Open keep staffing levels intact, launch a 'zine exploring rural LGBTQ food traditions, and create seven Out in the Open Radio Hour episodes.

Old Stone House Museum

Cultural organizations like the Old Stone House Museum, which is operated by the Orleans County Historical Society, are especially important in rural areas like the Northeast Kingdom. The museum includes the collections of Alexander Twilight, a progressive educator who was the first person of African descent to receive a college degree in the United States when he graduated from Middlebury College in 1823. “We’d be losing a cornerstone if we had to permanently shut our doors because of Covid-19, a lack of funds, and a lack of tour revenue,” said Executive Director Molly Veysey. The Historical Society received a $7500 Emergency Relief Grant from Vermont Humanities.

Dual Grants:

JAG Productions

JAG Productions in White River Junction presents classic and contemporary African-American theatre with a goal to challenge hierarchies of race, gender, class, and sexuality. A $7500 grant from the Vermont Arts Council and Vermont Humanities helped the organization chip away at debt and keep its staff during the pandemic. “Art is what brings us together,” said Producing Artist Director Jarvis Green. “It’s what connects us. It’s what keeps us in larger conversations. It’s how we see humanity reflected.”

Big Heavy World

A $5000 grant from Vermont Humanities and the Vermont Arts Council helped Big Heavy World respond to both the pandemic and to George Floyd’s murder and subsequent Black Lives Matter protests. “We perceive our role to be one of amplification,” said Executive Director James Lockridge. To help serve the Burlington community of new Americans, DJ Jules Wetchi (pictured) broadcasts community health information in multiple languages from Big Heavy World’s radio station.

The Town Hall Theater in Middlebury used the $10000 in CARES Act grants they received from Vermont Humanities and the Vermont Arts Council to support artists, pay staff wages, cover general operating costs, and host their first live, outdoor show since the theater closed temporarily due to the pandemic. The sold-out show by Bread & Puppet Theater was held behind Woodchuck Cider in September. Town Hall Theater later helped host other outdoor events, including the play “The Agitators” at the Clemmons Family Farm in Charlotte.
